Dear Secretary Clinton,

Delivering aid transparency at the High Level Forum on Aid Effectiveness, Busan, Nov 29 – Dec 1 2011

We, the undersigned agencies, networks and organizations, warmly welcome the U.S. Government's Open Government Partnership (OGP) commitment to internationally comparable reporting for foreign aid in an open format. We are delighted to hear last week of your participation at the Fourth High Level Forum (HLF-4) on Aid Effectiveness in Busan. We are writing now to ask for your support in ensuring that donors reaffirm and deepen their commitments on aid transparency at the Forum. In this letter we set out why aid transparency is needed now; what we believe is achievable at Busan and in the Working Party on Aid Effectiveness process; and what we would like you to do before Busan.

The recent Evaluation of the Paris Declaration and the Monitoring Survey emphasize that transparency is the indispensable foundation for aid effectiveness, accountability and results. Although donors and partner countries acknowledged this in 2008 by making several aid transparency commitments under the Accra Agenda for Action (AAA), the pace and extent of change, particularly regarding transparency for development results, has been "mostly slow to moderate".¹

Public support for the "Make Aid Transparent" Campaign – already supported by 96 organizations and with thousands of signatures from 125 countries – shows how people around the world want their governments to deliver on these commitments.

Partner countries have also recognized the need for greater aid predictability and transparency and for ensuring compatibility of the common standard with partner government budget systems, as reflected in the CABRI² Position on Aid Transparency. This compatibility would allow the alignment of aid information with country budgets, enabling partner governments to plan their resource allocation most effectively and supporting accountability processes at the country level.

We believe that aid transparency is an area in which donors will be able to demonstrate real progress at Busan, with implementation of the International Aid Transparency Initiative (IATI) being crucial to that success. With less than 3 months to go before Busan, aid transparency must be recognized as a core theme and IATI as the primary vehicle for delivering this, embedded as a set of concrete, time-bound and measurable commitments in the final Outcome Document. In practice, this requires the following:

- All donors publish comprehensive, timely, forward-looking data on all aid flows in a common, public and comparable format in accordance with the IATI standard by December 2015;

² The Collaborative Africa Budget Reform Initiative (CABRI) is a network of senior budget officials in 22 African Ministries of Finance or Planning.

- All donors publish implementation schedules by December 2012 in order to meet these commitments;
- Published information uses common definitions and formats that are compatible with partner countries' budgets and systems.

As an observer to the IATI process, your support in actively promoting aid transparency internationally will be vital before and during HLF-4. The U.S. Government's foreign aid transparency is equally important. We encourage the Government to begin implementing the OGP commitments on foreign aid before HLF-4 by adding more agencies' request, appropriation, obligation, expenditure, project information and performance data and all Country Development Cooperation Strategies on the Foreign Assistance Dashboard. We look forward to seeing this information "cross-walked" to the global common standard.

IATI's feasibility for delivering aid transparency is now clear – donors accounting for 33% of reported ODA have so far declared their intention to publish to the standard by Busan. We look forward to working with you to ensure that this figure continues to grow and that HLF-4 truly delivers on aid transparency both for U.S. and partner country citizens.

Yours sincerely,
